An award-winning architect who gravitates towards traditional architecture and historic preservation, Peter Pennoyer is equally fluent in the language of classicism and the artistry of contemporary design. Before founding his present firm in 1991, he had independent commissions that included artist Keith Haring's Pop Shop on Lafayette Street and renovations to The Warhol Factory. Current projects include a collaboration with Turquoise Mountain—a non-profit organization that specializes in urban generation for Afghanis—to create custom lattice screens (fabricated in Afghanistan) for a house in upstate New York. He is also co-authoring a book with his wife, Katie Ridder, scheduled to hit bookstores in September 2016.
